

I believe the FCC should strengthen rules that prohibit monopolies in information markets, including television, radio, cable, and Internet. In fact, I recommend reinstituting the laws that were erased in 1996. We have to remember that the primary concern is ensuring that news is distributed by as many different and independent channels as possible. It is the government's responsibility to ensure that the big fish don't eat the little fish.

Please consider this during the public comment period this month in Richmond.